A NOTE FROM MARIA

I am having a case of the feels.

First, Akira Kurosawa Explains His Movies and Yogurt (with Live and Active Cultures!) is my last world premiere play as Artistic Director of Woolly Mammoth Theatre Company.

And this morning, before writing this note and after a year of searching, my father was officially diagnosed with vascular dementia.

His younger sister, my namesake, has been battling Lewy body dementia in his native country of Spain for four years now, and can no longer walk or communicate with us. Zoom calls between my father and his beloved sister are painful, and will only become more so.

Grief's a bitch, ain't it?

Our playwright Julia Izumi certainly thinks so. Like the character of Julia in this play, I will do anything to avoid feeling all these feels. Add in complex interpersonal family dynamics and POOF! I want to evaporate into thin air at the sheer mention!

So let's avoid it. Let's talk about YOU!

We have gotten to know each other pretty well over these last seven years. Woolly audiences are accustomed to boundary-pushing work, and I certainly have tried my best to experiment with exactly where the edges of those boundaries lie (for better or for worse!). Akira is an experimental AND a more "traditional" play at the same time—it is a delicious irreverent theatricalized romp into the world of a world-renowned filmmaker AND it is a linear look at the relationship of two brothers who loved each other deeply. I encourage you to enjoy the romp while understanding that these brothers represent something richer and more powerful for Julia and her own family. These types of feels are how artists are born. Artists like Akira Kurosawa. Artists like Julia Izumi.

Witnessing director Aileen Wen McGroddy in action, from conceptual development with Julia to now its full execution, has been a masterclass in care, originality, and intellectual rigor. I expect this will be the first of many productions you will see helmed by her, in DC and elsewhere. And to get to partner with Susan Bernfield and Jaynie Saunders Tiller at New Georges, one of the foremost developers of new work for the American theatre...it's a dream team! Truly!

I can't wait for you to see this play. In true Woolly fashion, it is unlike any play you have seen before. And yet, in the end, I hope you realize it is like EVERY play on our stage at Woolly Mammoth.

It is a play that shows us how to look.

And by not averting our eyes, this is a play that teaches us how to feel ALL the feels.

Thank you for coming along for the ride with me these past seven years at Woolly Mammoth. It's been one of the greatest honors of my life.

Con todo amor y cariño para Woolly y cada uno de ustedes,

Maria Manuela Goyanes

PLAYING PRETEND: AN INTERVIEW WITH PLAYWRIGHT JULIA IZUMI

Woolly's New Work Department, Sonia Fernandez and Aysha Zackria, connected with Julia Izumi, playwright and actor in AKIRA KUROSAWA [...] to discuss theater-making, yogurt, and being weird.

SONIA FERNANDEZ: Can you talk about the origins of the play?

JULIA IZUMI: I had always wanted to write about Akira Kurosawa because he's such a big Japanese figure internationally, and I didn't know a lot about him or about film in general.

My first play, where I feel like I found my voice, was a play about Murasaki Shikibu¹, a Japanese novelist who arguably wrote the first novel in the world. I was like Kurosawa could be a part of a series of plays about a Japanese figure who has made impacts globally that I can investigate further.

Then I was in grad school, and I started having a lot of stomach issues. I was trying to eat things that were good for my gut health. I was eating a lot of yogurt – like a LOT of yogurt. I was riding in a car with one of the other playwrights in my [MFA Playwriting] program, and I was suddenly like, “Oh my gosh! I've got it! What if Akira Kurosawa is giving a lecture about his movies, but all he can talk about is yogurt.”

SF: Julia, we're curious about your relationship to storytelling. You're in this piece and thinking about the several roles that you play in creating your work. Is this the first project that you've written and performed in?

Ji: I actually also did in that Murasaki piece. I played Murasaki Shikibu.

SF: So, it is going to be a cycle! Who's next?

Ji: The third one is a little up in the air. I'm thinking either Japanese baseball players playing in the American leagues or the guy who invented the Emoji.

AYSHA ZACKRIA: Both thrilling.

Ji: Thank you. Yeah, both making big impacts in worlds I don't know a lot about. Especially the baseball thing.

SF: What is it like to be writing, knowing that you're a character?

JJ: It's both harder and easier in some ways. Easier because I'm like, "Well, who cares? I can just change this." I'm a little bit less precious about it. Once I'm up there, I can flub around here and there, make it sound better. At the same time, my skills as an actor are pretty limited. I have a few more constraints to stick to, in a funny way.

AZ: How close is Julia, you as a person in this interview right now, to Julia on stage? Are you the same Julia? Are you the different Julias for narrative purposes?

JJ: The Julia on stage is just a hair more full-of-herself and a little more braggadocious. She has the confidence to perform, to be up there and take up space, talking at an audience for a long time. She's a slightly heightened version of me.

AZ: How do you hold both the acting and the playwriting?

JJ: When I did it with Murasaki, we had a much shorter run, so I had to freeze the script² early. While I was in the rehearsal room, I was just an actor. But if there's like really big questions about changing something, they can be asked. This time, because the process is longer, I'll be staying in the playwright-actor situation for a bit longer. I'm hoping we can find ways for me to pop in and out. Then at a certain point, I want to be like, "Okay, from this point onward, Julia is just an actor." I can be a little less jumbled in the brain.

SF: I'm curious about your style. It's quite singular to you. How did you come to this irreverent, playful writing voice?

JJ: Irreverent is a really good word. Especially when I'm looking into the lens of history. When I was a kid, I hated history class because I was like, "Oh, this is so boring." Because of that, when I look into something historical, or a figure of some kind, I always try to ask, "How would young Julia like to receive this information?" – and make it a little less serious. I also just think it's funny.

I do think there are things that we take very seriously that maybe we don't need to. If we didn't take it so seriously, it would actually become more accessible. Theater being one of them, prices notwithstanding. To the general public, theater gives an air of being highbrow. I think if people knew that theater is also just silly people playing pretend, then they might find it more relatable.

SF: I see the seriousness in Akira Kurosawa. I studied his films in a college class, and they were held up as, “the pinnacle of filmmaking” – film, not movie. You chose “Explains His Movies,” which is a distinction about prestige and accessibility in art. The play itself attempts to take Akira down to a human level.

JJ: Absolutely, [it has] this assumption that you have to be really knowledgeable to get it.

SF: And have reverence for the craft.

JJ: Yeah. I'm really into dismantling those things.

As you can tell from my writing, I'm not as interested in realism. I try to see what the weirdos are doing. All my favorite playwrights around me, my friend playwrights who I love, are weirdos.

It's less about “weird” honestly because weird is another one of those things that people will think they're not smart enough to understand. But really theatrical. Theater that understands that it's theater as opposed to theater that thinks it's a movie. That's what I want to see.

SF: Some of the play is in Japanese and being translated – to varying degrees of truthfulness – by intertitles. Do you consider this play bilingual?

JJ: I wouldn't call it bilingual, even though there is another language heavily included. I've used Japanese in my plays to varying degrees of how it's understood to an audience who doesn't necessarily speak Japanese.

I feel like my generation of playwrights, especially those of us who are children of immigrants are in an era of playing around with how language is used on stage and what is communicated to an audience who might not understand the other language. There's this gambit of not translating at all, or really making it translated, or maybe making it translated funnily. And I think all ways are valid, which is why in this play I kind of do a mix of all of it.

The intertitles really did come from the idea of a presentation like, “Here’s the PowerPoint slide that goes with this lecture.” Then I realized it’s going to be really useful as a way of pointing out the lies that are happening, almost as footnotes.³

SF: I came across your essay about grief and your play Regretfully, So The Birds Are for Playwrights’ Horizons. How has your thinking about grief evolved while writing Akira Kurosawa...?

JJ: I also wrote this play [around the same] time. Although, the grief in this play is very different from the ones that I was experiencing then. I do feel like my plays are responding to my understanding of grief in the moment.

I’m definitely not alone in writing about grief. I feel like most writers are writing about grief always, even if they’re not conscious of it or it’s not necessarily a tangible grief. This current process of grief I’m in is making me understand that we really actually still don’t know how to talk about it as human beings, even though this has been happening from the beginning. We’ve had thousands of years to prepare.

SF: Is there anything else that you want to say to our readers?

JJ: I hope they have fun. Get some yogurt. Look at the things in your life you’re supposed to look at. Face the brave things. Yeah, that’s all.

SF: Thanks for taking the time, Julia.

FULL INTERVIEW

[1] Born in the 10th century, Murasaki Shikibu was a Japanese novelist, poet and royal attendant. She is known for writing The Tale of Genji between 1000 and 1012. It is widely considered to be one of the world’s first novels.

[2] To “freeze” a script means to stop making edits. This needs to happen early enough in the process for the actors to memorize their lines and the production team to build their light and sound cues.

[3] While there may be lies in the play, there are no lies (that we are aware of) in this interview.

MICHIO ITŌ MODERN DANCE'S ASIAN AMERICAN PIONEER

Washington, DC's premier modern dance company, Dana Tai Soon Burgess Dance Company, performs five historic gems by the first Asian American modern dance pioneer, Michio Ito (1892-1961). The program includes: Ave Maria (1914), Pizzacati (1916), Tone Poem I and II (1928) and En Bateau (1929). Itō's indelible mark spans artistic generations – Martha Graham, Lester Horton and DTSBDC, Artistic Director, Dana Tai Soon Burgess were all influenced by his signature aesthetic.

Burgess sheds insight into the legacy of this fascinating dancer and choreographer, by highlighting selections of work reminiscent of danced haiku, from 1914 through 1929 which demonstrate his unique movement and his complicated journey. From Ito's beginnings in Europe and NYC – to his impact on Los Angeles and Hollywood and, ultimately, his incarceration under Executive Order 9022. This modern dance history experience is presented in celebration of Asian American Heritage month.

ABOUT WOOLLY MAMMOTH

The Tony Award®-winning Woolly Mammoth creates badass theatre that highlights the stunning, challenging, and tremendous complexity of our world. Woolly is proud to be considered “a national champion of the new—and frequently provocative—American play” (Washington Post).

For over 40 years, Woolly has maintained a high standard of artistic rigor while simultaneously daring to take risks, innovate, and push beyond perceived boundaries. Located in Washington, DC, equidistant from the Capitol Building and the White House, this unique location influences Woolly’s investment in actively working our mission: To produce courageous and invigorating new work to radically redefine theatre as a catalyst for an equitable, creative, and engaged society.

One of the few remaining theatres in the country to maintain a company of artists, Woolly serves as an essential research and development role within the American theatre.

PLAYS PREMIERED HERE HAVE GONE ON TO PRODUCTIONS AT HUNDREDS OF THEATRES ALL OVER THE WORLD AND HAVE HAD LASTING IMPACTS ON THE FIELD.

A Strange Loop was produced at Woolly in 2021, ran on Broadway from April 2022 through January 2023, and won the Tony Award® for Best Musical in 2022. Other notable highlights include the world premiere productions of Danai Gurira’s Eclipsed in 2009 that later went on to be the first Broadway play with a cast & creative team of all Black women; Bruce Norris’ Pulitzer Prize-winner Clybourne Park in 2010; and Anne Washburn’s Mr. Burns: a post-electric play in 2012. Woolly produces theatre beyond our building by sending productions like Aaron Posner’s *Stupid F*cking Bird* across the nation, bringing Aleshea Harris’ What to Send Up When It Goes Down to neighborhoods throughout DC, and launching a national tour of Madeline Sayet's Where We Belong.

Woolly has built a reputation for innovation off the stage as well. Woolly values building relationships with its local community and resident artists in the DMV area. Our nationally-acclaimed Connectivity Department is one of the ways we accomplish this by linking Woolly to like-minded community organizations in order to generate mutually beneficial, impact and power-aware partnerships.

WE'VE EARNED OUR REPUTATION BY HOLDING FAST TO OUR CORE VALUES.

We are an anti-racist and radically inclusive community—across race, ethnicity, nationality, age, gender identity, sexual orientation, physical ability, socioeconomic background, and political viewpoint—in which all are encouraged to exchange ideas freely and reach for new understanding. We are a supportive home for creative risk-taking by our company and guest artists, staff, board, volunteers, audiences, donors, and colleagues. Through relentless inquiry and experimentation, we strive for world-class excellence and innovation in every aspect of our work.

OUR AUDIENCE COMPLETES OUR MISSION.

Woolly attracts one of the youngest and most diverse theatre audiences in DC, and we're committed to making our work widely accessible. Woolly was the first to pioneer Pay-What-You-Will tickets in the DMV, which are now available at every single performance.

THANK YOU TO ALL OF OUR DONORS, SUBSCRIBERS, AND AUDIENCE MEMBERS. WITH YOUR SUPPORT, WE WILL CONTINUE TO FIND AND PRODUCE THE MOST INNOVATIVE NEW PLAYS IN AMERICA.

Maria is a first-generation Latinx-American, born to parents who emigrated from the Dominican Republic and Spain. She was raised in Jamaica, Queens, and has a collection of hoop earrings to prove it. She earned her Bachelor of Arts in 2001 from Brown University.

LAND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Woolly Mammoth acknowledges that our theatre stands upon occupied, unceded territory: the ancestral homeland of the Nacotchtank whose descendants belong to the Piscataway peoples. Furthermore, the foundation of this city, and most of the original buildings in Washington, DC, were funded by the sale of enslaved people of African descent and built by their hands.

Provide transformational career development opportunities through the Miranda Family Fellowship program to train and compensate the next generation of theatre makers.

Establish innovative collaborative partnerships with local organizations like SPIT DAT, DC's longest running open mic, THEARC Theater, and Howard University.
